Refrigerator ships are now found on nearly all the big steamship routes and they can carry perishables as long and as far as necessary, but butter shipped by the ordinary cargo steamer usually melts and remains in a liquid state as long as it is exposed to the trople heat. When it passes into the temperate zone again, it hardens, and the change usually spoils it for the taste, entirely destroying the flavor and leaving it like ordinary grease or oil The Danes, however, produce a butter which will endure this ordeal without affecting its flavor or sweetness, and they are the only people of whom this may be said.—Chicago Herald.

How Sponges Are Sold.

When offered for sale in the local market in the Bahamas, sponges are either piled up loose or made into strands or beads of from two to ten sponges each. The best sponges are usually made into strings of from eight to ten sponges each. Others are generally sold in lots not strung. Th buyer, however, is not guided in his purchase by the number of sponges of a string, but by what a certain lot wil weigh, and the weight is never given but the buyer must estimate it; hence practical experience is needed in the purchasing of sponges.

A writer in The American X Ray Journal tells of some unusual experi-ments upon insects with Roentgen rays. A box was made, half of wood and half of sheet lead. In the wooden ball a number of larvæ of flies, bees, bee The butter of Denmark is considered | Precious Lives That Might | tles and other insects were placed, and the box was then but in the field of the X rays. The insect colony at once be-came greatly excited, and after crawling to and fro finally emigrated to a worm to the leaden half of the box, where the rays could not penetrate. The experiment was repeated many times and always with the same result,

A similar experiment was tried with the blind larvæ of a certain species of beetle. A number of them were placed in an open eigar box, which also con tained a metal box with an opening No sooner were the rays turned on than the insects showed signs of dis tress. Their uneasiness increased, and in a little while they all sought refuge in the metal box. As the larvæ in the second experiment were entirely sightless their perception of the rays must take place through the nerves of the skin.

The camphor tree (Cinnan phora) is an evergreen, a member of the laurel family, belonging to the same genus as the tree whose bark furnishes the spice called cinnamon, and is related to the bay and to the sassafras of the United States. Of symmetrical proportions, it is one of the no blest objects in the forests of eastern subtropical Asia. In its native habitat it attains gigantic dimensions, notably in girth of trunk, some specimens measuring 10 to 15 feet in diameter. It is said they have been known to reach as much as 20 feet, and they may be 60 to over 100 feet high, and live to a great age. As a rule, they rise 20 or 30 feet without limbs and then branch out in all directions, becoming a mass of spien-did and luxuriant foliage. Their leaves, broadly lanceolate in form, are of a light green color, smooth and shining above and whitish or glaucous on the undersurface. Small white or greenish white flowers are borne from February to April and by October ripen into berrylike, one seeded fruits about three-eighths of an inch in diameter.— Good Words.

The Inquisitive Antelope.

An antelope is as curious as a woman. If the hunter will lie down in the grass and wave a red handkerchief, a band of antelope will keep circling around until within reasonable distance for a safe shot. After completing a circle the antelope halt suddenly and bring down one fore foot with a vigorous stamp on the ground, and at the same instant they make a sort of snort that sounds like a half whistle. That is the propitious moment for peppering them with rifle balls.

I learned this trick when a frontiers man came along and found me crawling for miles on the level prairie en deavoring to get a shot at one of the timid creatures. The man asked me if I thought I could get him. I answered "Get him! I've got to get him. I'm out of ment." He then posted me about lying still and flirting with the handkerchlef, and I found they liked that better than chasing, and I made an entry right there that an antelope possessed some of the characteristics of a woman.—Exchange.

Masquerading In the Past. In the seventeenth and eighteentl centuries Venice set the fashion in all matters of amusement and was a sort of combination of our Monte Carlo and Paris. Throughout the eighteenth cen tury the Venetians were seized with perfect mania for masquerading and gambling. Paris and London followed sult, and the two most popular amuse ments, both public and private, were masquerades and gambling saloons People not only wore their masks of visors at balls, but in the Mall and the parks and the theaters. At length matters got to such a pass that when a police raid was made on a certain low dancing place in Soho and an order was given for every one to unmask what was the amazement of the police to find that at least a third of the company consisted of ladies and gentlemen of the highest aristocracy some of whom had even brought their daughters.-Saturday Review. Cooking a Mackerel. Many a dainty nose with beauty and fortune behind it has been airily elevated at the mention of plain, old fash
